ZFT Licenses Unreleased Zappa Music Under Extraordinary Teamwork

June 28, 2003

(UPI) Gail Zappa, widow of the musical iconoclast Frank Zappa, has announced the launch of Extraordinary Teamwork, a limited concern that allows music producers and artists to license unreleased music by Frank Zappa.

"Those interested may license and incorporate the music into their own work, as long as Frank gets co-writing credit for the song or composition. There are other stipulations as well in the licensing agreement These renewable licenses get Zappa music to the public who may not have otherwise heard his music," informs Gail Zappa.

"The first licensee is Gene Simmons [of KISS] who is using sections of a live performance - including Frank's vocals - into a work Gene is calling 'Black Tongue'. Other licensees at this time are George Clinton [of Parliament/Funkadelic], Steve Albini [producer for Nirvana and the Pixies], Brian Eno [producer for U2 and the Talking Heads], David Foster [producer for Whitney Houston and Celine Dion], and we are in negotiations with several others whom I am cannot discuss at this time."
